

Part B: Poem-

1. God made the mountains, tall and wide,

The deep blue sea, the big blue sky.

He made every day, every night,

He made it perfect to his sight.

I think that peace means being kind,

To every living thing we find.

Some don't have a lot to eat,

But still find hope out in the street.

If God made earth for you and me,

Let's take care of it in humanity.

Love the earth, near and far,

By doing good, we'll go so far.

i: Laudato Si' Quote:

"Young people demand change. They wonder how anyone can claim to be building a better future without thinking of the environmental crisis and the sufferings of the excluded."

ii: Reflection (96 words):

This teaching connects with my poem because both focus on hope, care, and responsibility. The quote shows that young people want real action for creation and for those who are less fortunate, while my poem says that God made the world good and trusted us to take care of it. A scripture such as Genesis 2:15, "The Lord God took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to till it and keep it," also reflects this responsibility. Together, they show that caring for the earth is an act of kindness and love.

iii: Explanation (Hope theme):

Caring for creation demonstrates our 2025 theme of Hope because it means believing that change is possible. Hope is a choice to work for a better future where both people and creation can grow together.
