

Caring for Creation

Taryn Abdoush: Part B

My artwork

"The exploitation of the planet has already exceeded acceptable limits and we still have not solved the problem of poverty."

This quote links to my drawing because my drawing shows two sides to the Earth. The first side is simple and beautiful. It shows the beauty of nature and the natural Earth whilst the other side is more industrial. It represents the impact humanity has had on the Earth. This connects to the Laudato Si quote, as it agrees with it showing how humans have ruined the Earth, and we are slowly starting to take over and completely ruin the Earth. One side show what it should look like and the other side explains how humans are treating our planet.

The St. Columba's theme of Hope links to caring for creation as it shows our hope to create a better world for future generations. It shows our aim to create a better more sustainable environment that will help save our planet. As a community we aspire to overcome the exploitation of our environment, and hope to protect nature from being ruined as it already has started to. Hope symbolises our faith and trust that we can restore the Earth back to its beauty before humanity took over.
